

2-1-1 In the face of disasters

Life is a tapestry made from an unstoppable blend of unique experiences
It is these unique experiences that place us in our current positions in life
It is these unique experiences that determine our lows and our highs

Eyes open wide like a sky swallowing clouds may never see the world through others lenses,
But sight is not a requirement to see internal needs for service within this

It is human destiny to have mishaps and set backs
It is our fate we attempt to master to prevent eventual disasters

Disasters are as small as an ant hill for some while for others this mountain is huge
And disasters are not racist and keep a multicultural view

Disasters do not care how old you are or how young you are Disasters do not care about your source of income, your home, or your car

Disasters simply do not care about your history or your religious faith
Disasters affect all of us. Disasters do not discriminate

And isn't it comforting to know that someone cares about what you're going through
...someone is willing to work with you to reduce the pressure without judging you

...Someone confident with an empathetic ear and a confidential style
...Someone to help you help yourself with a voice filled with smiles
AND because

An interaction between struggle and success is often what life is 211 United the Way to discover Eden in the Center of Crisis

24hours 7days a week there is access to essential services and community resources
From a data base or a binder
For information and referrals for yourself, a relative, friend, or client, 211 is your friendly reminder

That you are but three digits away from making life a little bit kinder